Rare Masterpiece Reveals the 'Underbelly' of Marvellous Melbourne

Important Australian Art, Auction in Sydney 28 April

FLORENCE FULLER 1867-1946, Weary 1888. Estimate $150,000-200,000

A rare image of nineteenth century Australia will be auctioned by Sotheby's Australia on 28 April 2015 at the InterContinental Sydney. Held in the same family collection for over 100 years, Florence Fuller's provocative painting Weary 1888 (estimate $150,000-200,000, lot 103, pictured) depicts a destitute child slumped against a wall of bill-boards, with the backdrop of Melbourne's thriving wharves in the distance.

Completed in 1888, Weary is both a landmark in the artist's own career as well as in the history and development of late-nineteenth century Australian Art. Fuller, like her contemporaries Frederick McCubbin, John Longstaff, David Davies and Aby Altson painted in a social realist narrative format – with expressive depictions of daily life given a particularly local, frontier inflection.

Enthusiastically received when shown in Melbourne in 1890 and 1891 and again when included in the 1992 exhibition Completing the Picture: Women Artists and the Heidelberg Era Fuller's image of a homeless child remains a powerful and provocative statement – 'bearing the unmistakable stamp of poverty and suffering' and, as further written in Table Talk in 1890, 'Miss Fuller may well be congratulated on the working out of the subject.' Fuller was bold enough to address social inequality in a time when her male contemporaries were celebrating the urbanisation and mercantile advancements of Marvellous Melbourne.

'The subject of Weary is equally astonishing today as it was when first shown in its portrayal of social inequality and homelessness' said Geoffrey Smith, Chairman of Sotheby's Australia. 'Nearly one hundred and thirty years after it was painted, Fuller's composition remains confronting and daring in both its subject and technique.'
